The parts which broke were the two hangers which carried the most easterly pair of beams of the northerly or last built truss, as can be judged they are made from good at the Gould hospital this afternoon. iron. They are of very bad design and most imperfectly welded. In addition to that they are both very badly flawed by old rusted breaks at most sections, there Ibeing two distinct breaks of this kind. The first nanger has both breaks across the weld, the first break being complete and the work since its original fracture or it would have broken apartlong since. The second hanger was checked across halfits inside face, covered by supposed welds for about half its depth of effective section, and this was clearly where the fracture first began. It caused a secondary fracture at the second break in the nook of the welded end, which cut off the larger portion of the effective strength of the iron. All this is clearly shown in the engravings of the bridge and its broken parts which appear in this issue, and the general judgment of the engineers will GAINESVILLE, TEX., March 16 .- G.
